Did You Know?

According to recent data from the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs (VA), as of 2025, there are about 66,000 World War II veterans still living. Considering that more than 16 million Americans served in World War II, this means less than 0.5% of those who fought in the war are still alive today. These men and women are now mostly in their late 90s to over 100 years old, representing one of the final living links to a pivotal era in U.S. and world history.
